

I have dark skin, can I get permanent hair reduction?

It used to be the case that people with dark skin were not able to do laser or IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) permanent hair removal. This is no longer true.

There is a new technology called elōs that combines the power of light (laser and IPL) with RF (Radio Frequency). These two energy sources when used in unison are able to treat most skin and hair colours.

How does elōs hair removal work?

With IPL and Laser the light is attracted to the colour (melanine) in the hair. The light gets converted into heat energy when it touches the hair shaft, travelling to the hair follicle and destroying it.

If the person has dark skin the light will also be attracted to the colour in the skin and cause damage to the dermis. To avoid the damage to the skin the IPL/Laser settings have to be lowered and the energy delivered to the follicle is not enough to permanently destroy it.

RF on the other hand is colour blind, it delivers the energy through the path of less resistance. Hence, when you combine both IPL/Laser and RF, the IPL/Laser can be used with low settings to create a path for the RF to complete the job.

Mind you, the hair colour must still be darker than the skin colour. Very dark skins such as those from African origin in which the hair colour is the same as the skin's are still not able to be treated.

At our clinic we have had fantastic results with people from Indian and Middle Eastern origin, in which the hair tends to be darker than the skin.
